

NORTHWEST ASSISTANT TRIBAL CLIMATE RESILIENCE LIAISON

Kylie Avery (she/her)

MEET KYLIE

Kylie Avery is an enrolled Shawnee Tribal citizen and is the Northwest Climate Adaptation Science Center's Assistant Tribal Climate Resilience Liaison through the Affiliated Tribes of Northwest Indians (ATNI). In her role, she engages with tribal governments and NGOs on tribal issues as they pertain to climate change, resource vulnerability, and climate adaptation actions.

“I am excited to connect you with resources to further strengthen tribal climate resilience in the Northwest and beyond.”

CONTACT KYLIE

✉ kavery@atnitribes.org

☎ (760) 855-6179

🔗 <https://atnitribes.org/climatechange/>

➤ TRIBAL LIAISON SERVICES

The Affiliated Tribes of Northwest Indians supports climate resilience by connecting Tribes to grant opportunities, offering free workshops on various topics and hosting regional and national meetings and events. Some of these opportunities include the National Tribal Leadership Climate Change Summit, the Northwest Tribal Clean Energy Summit and the Tribal Climate Camp.

Kylie's role as a liaison is to develop partnerships to advance tribal resilience to climate impacts and to serve as an informational hub between Tribes, Federal agencies, researchers, and other tribal and non-tribal partners.

Can Kylie help me find funding?

Yes, Kylie can help find funding opportunities as they become available through various federal and non-federal sources. She helps support the University of Oregon's Tribal Climate Change Guide, an up-to-date database that provides resources related to funding, tribal adaptation plans, hazard mitigation, and more.

What other resources can Kylie connect me with?

Kylie can assist in facilitating relationships between tribal and non-tribal partners. She can help connect you with materials that pertain to climate resilience from a holistic perspective.

